ALEXANDRIA ACADEMY.—The fall term of this institution, will commence on Monday, August 31st. The course of study embraces the usual branches of an English Education, the LATIN, GREEK, and FRENCH LANGUAGES, and a FULL COURSE IN MATHEMATICS. Youths can be prepared in this School for College, the Counting-Room, or the study of a Profession.—Instruction is given by means of Text-Books, Lectures, and familiar remarks and illustrations on each recitation.
To every student is assigned recitations sufficient, in the judgment of the teacher, to occupy the hours allotted to study; and, at the time for reciting, he is thoroughly examined, and such explanations are then given, as will enable him to understand the subject fully, and aid in impressing it clearly upon the mind.

A monthly report of each student, carefully made out from records preserved of all his recitations, is sent to parents and guardians, presenting a faithful account of his industry, scholarship, and general development.

The students will have the advantage of an attendance upon a regular course of LECTURES on NATURAL PHILOSOPHY and CHEMISTRY delivered during the fall and winter months. These Lectures will be fully illustrated, by a beautiful and complete set of Apparatus. The School is also supplied with Surveying Instruments, Globes, Maps, Charts and a REFLECTING TELESCOPE, of eight feet focal length, a powerful and effective instrument.

In connection with the present School, which has been heretofore open for the admission of day scholars only, a limited number of BOARDING SCHOLARS will be received. Those who attend the School as boarders, will reside in the family of the Principal, and as only a small number will be received, such attention to their morals and comfort will be given, as will, it is believed, supply, in a great measure, the tender solicitude received under the parental roof.

TERMS.—The charge for boarding, washing, fuel and lights, with Tuition in English, Latin and Greek, $150 a year, payable quarterly, in advance.
The quarters consist of 12 weeks each. Tuition in French, Drawing and Painting, an extra charge.

R. L. BROCKETT,
Principal, Alexandria.

POETRY.

Its words

Are few, but deep and solemn, and they break Fresh from the fount of feeling.—Percival.

Written for the Western Cataract.

THE MONSTER SLAIN.

The monster's path is paved with bones,
And painted red with gore,
'Tis lumbered with the wreck of thrones, And chequers every shore.

With flaming eyes and foeted breath, He haunts his gloomy caves,
A deputy, employed by death,
To fill untimely graves.

His breath pollutes the virgin air—Poisons each breeze that flies;
He makes the sea his liquid lair, Mankind his sacrifice.

The hydra-headed monster must—Must now depart or die, His blistered tongue shall lick the dust;
His last groan rend the sky.

The temperance pledge shall be our shield,
And temperance truth our word—
The wide world is our battle field,
The Lord of lords our Lord.

CHOICE READING.

"If you enlighten the people, do not forget that this is but half the work. Let them be made vicious and religious, or you leave them more exposed to danger than they were before."

Written for the Republican.

THE DOOM.

BY ESCHUYLUS.

CONTINUED.

The voice ceased; a gleam of light, first faint, but gradually growing more luminous appeared in the centre of the stream, which had become calm and unruffled as a lake on a summer's eve. The beams were unbroken by ripples, but they formed a ring of vivid, steady light encircling like a wreath a small body of water, which it lit up with a wild, strange lustre. In the midst of this ring, appeared a mist, which spread over the surface of the water, obscuring, like a cloud, the wreath of life, and then it vanished away in curls of vapor, revealing a dim and shadowy figure in the centre of the wreath. By degrees, the figure became distinct, until, perfectly defined, it stood forth, the very counterpart of the lovely creature who was gazing with so much intense earnestness upon this demon's glass.

The figure was within a garden, and around her were playing her merry offspring, two gay-hearted boys and a lovely girl; the girl was like her mother, and with more of thought than was wont to sit upon so young a brow, she leant in pensiveness upon her mother's lap; but the boys were chasing butterflies with smiles upon their happy faces, occasionally turning to gaze upon the pleased countenance of their beautiful mother.

But the scene is changed to a house of mourning. The bodies of the little boys were borne within the house—the one black with the poison of a serpent, the other with the bloated of drowning.

It is an occasion of joy. There is a large assembly within a brilliantly illumined hall, and the flashing of jewels and bright eyes, tell of mirth and gaiety. There is a vested priest, and before him stand two beings, dissimilar in years. The one is an elderly man, whose appearance betokens wealth—the other the young girl, now grown to budding womanhood.

Beautiful, but paler than her bridal drapery, with her large lustrous eye pregnant with an unborn tear, and a fierce throbbing breast, she stands, and yields her passive hand to him who stands beside her. But adown the room, leaning against a column for support, with arms folded on his breast, with a pale cheek and wildly flashing eye, gazing in mad intensity upon her form, a young man stands. He seems calm, but it is the calmness of despair. It needs no second glance to tell his love, for it is written on his countenance. The fitting vows are spoken, and the bride bath raised her head to receive the connubial kiss; but ere their lips do meet, with eyes flashing fire, forward the young man bounds, and with a sudden energy he hurls the husband down, then turns to view the bride. The blood hath mounted her cheeks; her eyes are beaming now. For an instant they stand gazing in wildness on each other's face; then rush into each other's arms, and in one long, passionate embrace, the lips of the lovers meet, he relaxes his hold, gazes for an instant wildly on her countenance, then rushes madly out, and never was seen more.

The bride has sunk like a blasted lily upon the floor, and over her is hanging, in speechless agony, her mother's form. Too late she sees her error, in letting gold overshadowed the love of the daughter's heart—her only child—the last three buds (two of which had been already so rudely blasted) just blooming, but with the venom of blighted affection, shedding its poison on her youthful and once happy heart.

The blighted heart lived on. Around her grew the fruits of wedded life—sons and daughters—but all save one died young—some with loathsome disease and one, a manly boy, by a wild horse was dashed with mangled limbs into eternity.
The husband, the man of wealth, died too —died poor and friendless. The dim eye of the wife gazed on his pallid, insensate frame; but her thoughts shone not there; perhaps she thought not—but if she did, the grief of many years had taught her to conceal them. I cannot tell. And all save one had died; and that one was separated from her—a girl of beauty—a girl of thought.
'Twas strange that she, her eldest born, was spared. . . . The scene was changed. It was a bright moonlight night. The girl had grown to womanhood, and had married one she could not love.— Her heart was wedded to another, and he grew wild and dissolute from disappointed love. Her husband was one given to appetites. It was a bright moonlight night, and, reeling and intoxicated, the husband was wending his solitary way across a dreary waste. Upon his left there yawned a dark ravine, and he unconsciously staggered by its edge. But there was one watching him, upon whose countenance the moonbeams shone, revealing a face haggard with horrid passion. And now 'twas lit with a strange fierceness. Slowly and cautiously he crept behind the reeling man, then with a sudden impetus he hurled him over the ravine—and with a wild, hysterical laugh, he fled. . . . It was more than she could bear. Her energy gave way—one piercing scream, and she fell back unconscious. . . . When she revived she was lying beneath a shady tree; her horse was quietly grazing by her side; and in her hand she clasped a roll of paper, on which were written these words:

'Tis a terrible doom for the heart to bear—So young and so full of grief and care—But 'twill always be so, whenever is sold The love of the heart for glittering gold.
Alas: for thy race is this sad doom:
The blight of gold shall wither its bloom!

The prophecy was fulfilled. The blighting breath of gold rushed over the heart, withering its flowers—and, naked and disrobed, this Tree of Life stood blasted in its youthful prime. I shall only show the fulfilment of the prophecy as connected with the lost of her race—that girl of beauty and of thought.

"All things unto me Show their dark sides; somewhere there must be light.
Oh! I feel like a seed in the cold earth.
Quickening at heart and pining for the air; Passion is destiny. Thy heart is its own Fate.

Her heart was all humanity In spirit and in form Like fair. Her cheek had the pale pearly pink Of seashells—the world's sweetest tint—as though She lived, one half might deem, on roses sopped
In silver dew; she spake as with the voice Of spherical harmony which greets the soul, When at the hour of death the saved one knows His sister angels near, her eyes was as The golden pane the setting sun doth just Imbaze—which shows, till heaven comes down again,
All other light but grades of gloom; her dark Long rolling locks were as a stream the slave Might search for gold, and searching, find."
